Unit 3 Marketing

Marketing

Many businesses face tough competition, so if a company wants to become the market leader, it needs to analyze consumption habits by doing some effective market research. Some companies do their research in-house while others pay an agency to do it. Their findings help companies choose the best way to promote their product range to potential customers and can also help identify a target market for new products. Promotion is usually done through an advertising campaign, and companies might decide to make special offers, give out free samples, and even hold competitions. The company may also produce an online or paper catalog within their market segment and creates an image that helps the consumer to distinguish its trademark from those of competitors.
