

Unit 3 General Business

■ Company structure

Often a company is a business owned by one owner or proprietor. The owner receives the profit from the business, but also takes on the risks. When two or more individuals own the business it is called a partnership. Some companies merge with others or expand and restructure to become corporations that raise capital by offering shares to stockholders. The company can use the money from the shares to invest in its products or services and make a profit. The management of corporations is performed by directors who do not own the company but follow the instructions of the stockholders. Sometimes a company expands by making a successful takeover bid for another company through purchasing a majority of the shares. When a company does business, the earnings received are used to pay overhead and the stockholders receive the remaining money in the form of dividends.
